He is intimate with no one. He is a millionaire, and gives away money lavishly and indiscriminately. Those who have come in contact with him say that his manners and conversation at times are those of a polished, well-educated man of the world. On other occasions he is just as apt to be rude and insulting and without any provocation whatever, gives way to ungovernable fits of rage. Two years after the Valfreya's arrival at Brightlingsea, it chanced that a large party of Americans were making a tour of the east coast, and hearing of Brown and his eccentricities, decided to pay him a visit. Through is skipper, Brown heard of their intentions and the tidings threw him into a great state of excitement. He gave orders to have everything in readiness to steam away. On the following day the Americans chartthing in readiness to steam away. On the following day the Americans chartered a lot of small boats and put off for the Valfreya. Some of the men of the party bired a speedy steam launch, and freya's bottom was very foul and thick-coated with barnacles, and though she clapped on all steam, the launch gained on her. Seeing this, Brown, who was almost beside himself with rage, order-ed his skipper to hail the launch and threaten to drop a shot into her if she persisted in following. The captain hailed, but refused to train the yacht's gun on the launch. Brown started to do it himself.
